City officer laid to rest

Goodlett remembered as
'brother, partner, friend'

By Ricki Barker

In less than one week Lawrenceburg has laid to rest two of its finest men. One was a veteran, who spent years serving his community and was well versed in all aspects of law enforcement. Another was much younger, but no less honorable. What he lacked in experience he made up for in commitment to his duty and maturity beyond his years.

At the funeral for Officer Kenny Goodlett last Wednesday afternoon, the Goodlett family expressed their condolences to the Chrisman family for their loss. Trooper Eric Chrisman,

A note found in trooper Eric Chrisman's apartment shortly after his death asked a simple but poignant question: "What legacy do you want to leave?"

That question was answered for him over the past week as thousands upon thousands of people honored his service to Kentucky, his faith in God and comforted his family following his tragic death.

"This young man was an incredibly dedicated Christian man," said Ninevah Christian Church Pastor Terry Cooper, who presided over Chrisman's services.

Anderson County clerk issues first same-sex wedding license

Ricki Barker

Shortly after a Supreme Court ruling legalized gay marriage nationwide, the Anderson County Clerk's office issued its first same-sex marriage license application Friday afternoon.

According to employees at the office, two females asked for a marriage license early Friday morning shortly after the Supreme Court's decision was announced.

Anderson County Clerk Jason Denny said the couple waited patiently while the office received orders from Gov. Beshear.

As soon as the county clerk received word from the governor's office, the couple applied for a marriage license on the new gender neutral form and were issued the license around 1 p.m.

While Anderson County continues to comply with the ruling, many Kentucky clerks are defying the Supreme Court's decision, rather than condone what they feel goes against their religious beliefs.

Rowan County Clerk Kim Davis reportedly said her office in Morehead is refusing marriage licenses to all couples for the time being.

In a letter to all 120 Kentucky County Clerks, Beshear wrote, "Neither your oath nor the Supreme Court dictates what you must believe. But as elected officials, they do prescribe how we must act."

According to Kentucky law it is a Class A misdemeanor if a county clerk refuses to issue a gay couple a marriage license.

While many clerks are consulting with county attorneys on the matter, the Anderson County clerk's office said it will continue issuing marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

The Anderson News Facebook post on the matter garnered more than 100 comments. Many in the community expressed support for the

"We would just like to thank the whole community, including all of the police agencies, particularly the state police, for the way they cared for our son," Randy Chrisman said. "The way they just helped us through this trying time."

"We are praying to God to help make sense of this, but we are going on, smiling like Eric smiled and helping like Eric helped people."

He added that his family remains in awe at the outpouring of support.

"We stood in awe at the number of people that stood in line for three to four hours to come through the visitation line; in awe of the people who showed up for the funeral and how they lined the streets of Lawrenceburg.

only for the Chrisman family, but for law enforcement as a whole.

"It's amazing how much people care. I literally have 50 cards in my mailbox today, and have had that many in each of the past two days.

"We have a great community."

Pastor Terry Cooper of Ninevah Christian Church said the family's faith has been unshakable during such a tragic time in their lives.

"They are crushed, no doubt about it," he said. "But they are men and women of faith. If you don't have that, I'm not sure you could get through something like this."

"But they live in hope, and hope is in the resurrection of Christ. This separation is temporary and they will see their son again in the kingdom of Heaven."

"They're close, they're in a church here that loves them and stood with them, so they're not dealing with this alone."

Officer Clay Crouch said he had trouble trying to put into words what Goodlett meant to him. He decided to consult a large book of words for inspiration: the Webster's Dictionary.

"Brother, partner and friend. While Mr. Webster did a good job at defining those words, I have my own. Two simple words: Kenny Goodlett."

Crouch went on to explain that as you grow older you may gain many buddies but true friends are hard to come by.

"Kenny Goodlett was a true friend," he said.

Lance Roe, funeral director for Gash Memorial Chapel, said he was amazed at the ability of Goodlett to arrest people and still be their friend.

Roe highlighted Goodlett's good nature and humor during the service, recounting an exchange with Goodlett weeks before his death. Roe said went to visit Goodlett, who was battling cancer, when Goodlett motioned for Roe to come closer.

"I thought he would say something sentimental, but when I leaned over to him he said, 'Make sure you cut my hair and make me look good.'"

Goodlett's humor was felt throughout the service, with the "Dukes of Hazzard" and "Cheers" theme song being played.

Goodlett's wife, Debbie, said she loved her husband with all her heart and thanked everyone for prayers and condolences.

"Just thank you," she said among tears.

The community poured out of their homes to watch Goodlett's funeral procession as it wound through the streets of Lawrenceburg. Many waved flags and held homemade signs expressing gratitude for the legacy Kenny Goodlett left.

Chrisman's legacy won't be forgotten

Fluttering hearts and tight throats were common Monday when Lawrenceburg and the entire state of Kentucky paid homage to Kentucky State Trooper Eric Chrisman. He had died in the line of duty six days before.

Knowing that a young man's life taken at age 23, just a few months into what promised to be a fine career with the State Police, would be enough to make just about anyone stop and think. But to then see hundreds of policemen coming from nearly every town in Kentucky and from 15 states across the nation, including California, made those hearts flutter a bit more and that lump in the throat a little larger.

Here at The Anderson News, we recognized the enormity of what would transpire during the memorials for Chrisman. Our entire editorial department put everything else aside to coordinate coverage from different points of the ceremonies. As I was shooting photos near Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg, I noted several people wiping tears from their eyes.

And I don't mind telling you that I lost it a few times. I had to lower my camera to regain my composure and had done the same Sunday afternoon as I covered the state police Honor Guard placing Trooper Chrisman's body in Ninevah Christian Church. I have also heard of similar responses from people who witnessed a horse drawn carriage transporting Chrisman's body from the hearse to the gravesite and a helicopter flyover.

Honoring the sacrifice and touching the heart are exactly the emotions such ceremonies are designed to elicit. They are powerful and remind us of the difference first responders can make.

Trooper Eric Chrisman wanted to make a difference in people's lives. Yet the scene of hundreds of law enforcement officers honoring him reminds us of the dangers they face any time they put on the uniform.

Chrisman knew the danger. He also knew he could leave a legacy far beyond the memory of a funeral procession lasting over 40 minutes, as Monday's ceremony did. It was moving and unforgettable, but by Monday evening, there were only a few reminders to remind us of what had transpired in Lawrenceburg a few hours before.

True legacy comes in lives being touched. Eric Chrisman did that profoundly as a student at Christian Academy of Lawrenceburg. A note on The Anderson News Facebook page said that Chrisman was loved by the people in the Western Kentucky University Police Department, where he got his start in law enforcement.

Chrisman had been a role model as an assistant basketball coach at Christian Academy and as a counselor at Camp Calvary. And he was making a difference in lives as a Kentucky state trooper.

As wonderful as his funeral services were, my guess is Trooper Chrisman would have much rather be remembered for the lives he impacted.

Bothered by gay marriage? Here's who's really to blame

Column as I see 'em ... Count me among those disappointed with the Supreme Court's ruling last week on gay marriage, but not for the reason you might think.

I held an admittedly obtuse hope that the court would actually do its job and simply declare that the government has no enumerated Constitutional authority to approve or deny marriage, regardless of sexual preference, and order politicians to start minding their own business.

Of course that wasn't going to happen, not when the Supremes are as equally smitten with the power as politicians who love to find and exploit divisive issues to mask the nation's genuine shortcomings.

What really happened last week was nothing more than gay couples now being allowed to obtain permission slips disguised as marriage licenses from the government.

Think about that for a moment. Two people who want to join together can't officially do so until they've acquiesced to a government mandate that requires them to purchase a permission slip from their local county clerk.

Don't blame that on those identified as liberals or fake conservatives on the Supreme Court. Blame it instead on a nation that continuously allows more and more government intrusion into private lives, along with - and some of you aren't going to like reading this - people of faith.

That's right. Christians (and each of the other faiths in this nation) proudly say that marriage is a covenant with God, yet before they ever get to the altar, they subjugate that deeply held Biblical conviction by entering first into a covenant with government by obtaining a marriage license.

What's more, when they stand before a preacher to tie the knot, even the preacher acknowledges government's role when he or she says, "By the power vested in me, I now pronounce you husband and wife." Power vested, of course, by the government.

Yet I cannot recall a single instance where Christians have fought to get government out of their covenant with God, or any other religion for that matter.

Separation of church and state my butt.

Instead, they ritualistically go to their county clerk, pay for a license and later celebrate the fact that they are "legally" married.

I've long argued that instead of attempting to join straight couples in obtaining government permission slips to marry, gay people should have taken a different approach and fought to get government out of the process.

Lord knows government has given them plenty of reasons to do so. It wasn't too long ago that then-President Bill Clinton - his wife Hillary beaming at his side - proudly signed the Defense of Marriage Act that federally outlawed gay marriage.

A pair of recently evolved homophobes, to be sure, but what would you expect from a guy who forbid those serving in the military from declaring their sexual preference with his now infamous "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy?

Yet despite that and countless other government-sponsored assaults against them, gay people nevertheless fought long and hard to get in the permission slip line with the rest of America.

There was never any question that people of faith were going to try to keep them out of that line. After all, it was people of faith who largely had the market cornered on marriage - those who eloped to Vegas or rushed off the local justice of the peace being

Retirement for some old friends at ACE

I would like to congratulate Jerry Shaw and Ann Asbury on their retirement from the Anderson County Adult Learning Center. I have enjoyed working with them for many years and I consider them both dear friends.

I worked with Ann the longest. After working in banking for 18 years, I changed jobs in 1998 and became a math tutor and worked as Ann's instructional assistant under LaVerne Brumley. Over the years Ann has taught me a great deal about teaching, organizing, and always remembering to log student progress in their file.

She is a great teacher, and I know whatever she does in the future, she will come out smelling like a rose and planting them, too. She has a magical green thumb.

As I was writing this letter for the newspaper, I asked Ann to tell me about her journey as lead GED instructor for the Adult Learning Center, and she had these words to say:

"When Laverne Brumley and Helen Shyrock interviewed me in the summer of 1995 at our former place of learning on Main Street, I truly never thought I'd still be teaching adult education 20 years later. I have some truly wonderful memories of my career, which include working with learners who came to us with an eagerness to learn as well as those who had to struggle mightily to succeed.

The joy they demonstrated made my job a joy as well. Another treasured memory has been the people on our staff. We've been like a family, working together to keep things running smoothly and to the benefit of our learners.

"In retirement, I plan to first tackle several projects at home. I want to catch up on a stack of books that are waiting, and I definitely want to see more of my two grand-boys. Maybe even a part-time job is in my future."

I started working with Jerry in 2002 while he was attending the University of Kentucky. He worked in several positions throughout the years and in 2012 when Darlene Urban retired, the district decided that after 20-plus years the programs had grown so and needed two people to run the center. I would become director of Community Education and he would be director of Adult Education and Literacy. One of my favorite memories of Jerry is how he always thought of the staff when he visited his farm in Green County and brought produce from his garden, especially fresh pears from his pear trees. (He has a magical green thumb, too).

He also likes to cook, and he would treat us to one of his delightful experimental dishes periodically. He is a pretty good cook.

I asked Jerry to share with me about his journey at the center, and he had these words to say:

"I began as a volunteer on Main Street in 2002 as part of an education class assignment at UK. After graduation I was hired as a part-time instructor in 2003. Since then I have worked as an instructor, a youth program director, an ESL instructor, and finally became director of Adult Education and Literacy in July of 2012.

"My future plans include spending time at my farms in Green County. I plan to do agri-tourism and coordinate with the local school systems and 4-H programs to provide a location for science and agricultural education for field trips."

It has always been my pleasure to work with Ann and Jerry, so while I am saddened to see them go, I am confident that they will find the same success and happiness in retirement that they experienced during their time at the learning center. Friends, keep in touch, and I wish you the best in your future. I hope you find a million wild and crazy things to get into and thoroughly enjoy. Happy trails to you, until we meet again.

Chrisman will live on as The Trooper

If you travel down Coffee Tree Road in Frankfort you will soon find yourself face-to-face with the new Kentucky State Police Academy, and while this impressive former prison is a sight to behold; if you take a quick walk of the grounds and steer your steps to the center of the compound, you will find The Trooper.

He stands 10-feet-tall and his bronze uniform gleams in the sunlight. He rests upon a small platform that reads 'For all that serve and those who gave all.'

Upon closer inspection you will find that The Trooper is cast in mid stride, walking away from the academy and into the world he swore to protect. A journey few choose to take. Behind him, a thin gray line leads from the academy to The Trooper. It symbolizes the fact that The Trooper will forever be part of that thin grey line between the lawless and the lawful.

Ricki Barker
Staff writer

The Trooper represents those that have donated their lives to protect us. He embodies the dedication and sacrifice of anyone who has or will ever wear the Kentucky State Police uniform.

He represents Trooper Eric Chrisman.

While The Trooper was not present when Chrisman attended the academy, the statue was only installed a month before Chrisman was killed, his timing could not have been better.

Even though the 23-year-old never gazed up at The Trooper while attending classes, many new cadets will. These cadets will never know Eric Chrisman or the fact that he loved God and Mexican food and died while on duty, but they will know The Trooper. They will know that someone has come before them and made the ultimate sacrifice and that a community has grieved the loss of a fine human being.

Eric Chrisman will live on in the statue of The Trooper.

As its spirit and heart.

Do you have your water bag up yet?

Happy July.If there was ever a contest for most bountiful month, this one is it. Even better, today is the first of two full moons this month. Today is the Full Buck Moon, so named because this is the time of year that bucks grow new antlers.

Cheryl Steenerson
Columnist

However, it is also known as the Full Thunder Moon, because of the frequency of thunderstorms during the month.

The second full moon is on July 31 and is simply called a Blue Moon. Anytime a 2nd full moon occurs in the same month, the second one is Blue. This isn't quite as rare as you would think because it happens about once every 3 years.

July is typically the warmest month of the year and we have all kinds of national celebrations. July is not only National Picnic Month, it is also National Pickle Month, National Hot Dog Month, National Ice Cream Month and National Blueberry Month. Besides the hot dog one, count me in on all the others.

Eating out of doors is a lot of fun and I'm pretty sure each one of you could conjure up a fond family memory or two at just the thought. Eating out of doors does have its challenges, least of which is dealing with the bugs. So, I thought this would be a good time to remind you of a few handy tips to help you win the battle.

If you haven't already hung up your water bag then get to it. Fill a quart size Ziplock bag three quarters full with water. Then, use a thumbtack or something to stick it to the wall about eye level, next to the door. It keeps flying insects from coming in the house every time you open the door. Except, it doesn't work at night.

If you plan a picnic, then plan to have a pot or two of lemon balm plants strategically places. The lemon scent and citronella compound helps repel mosquitoes and other pests. Pinched leaves, rubbed on your skin, will help as well. You can also keep them off your body with chamomile tea spray. Use four bags in 2 cups of hot water and steep. Let it cool, then pour into a spray bottle and spray your skin. Store unused portion in the refrigerator.

With all that food, teetering on tables and plates, some is bound to fall to the ground. Pet lovers need to be knowledgeable about dangerous foods, before calling Fido over to clean up any messes.

Avocados, any part, is toxic to dogs, causing respiratory distress and stomach issues. Dark chocolate can cause all kinds of issues. Alcohol, like beer, has yeast and hops and dogs love it, the notable exceptions. Yet now, when people of faith cry foul that the Supreme Court has trashed the sanctity of marriage by allowing gay people to participate, government intrusion into their sacred covenant has them in an uproar, does it not?

Their silence at having their beliefs undermined because it didn't affect them is nothing new, and brings to mind the passage written by Pastor Martin Niemöller about the Nazis' eventual purging of the Jews. It goes something like this:

"First they came for the Socialists, and I did not speak out because I was not a Socialist.

Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I did not speak out because I was not a Trade Unionist.

Then they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out because I was not a Jew.

Then they came for me and there was no one left to speak for me."

Freedom isn't about cheering when your side wins a political argument or booing when it loses. It's about people, even those who can't stomach each other's politics or beliefs, standing together as one in the face of a government bent on taking those freedoms away.

Until we as a nation stop allowing politicians and the justices they appoint to stop subverting the Constitution to please disparate viewpoints in their insatiable desire for more power and control over the citizenry, they will continue to run roughshod over us all.

Squash is yet another gift of summer

Summer squash are staples in Kentucky gardens and at local farmers markets. Their versatility makes them easy to prepare for tasty summer meals and side dishes. Two of the more popular varieties include yellow squash and zucchini.

Joan Martin
Extension columnist

Squash are fleshy vegetables protected by a hard rind. They belong to the plant family that includes melons and cucumbers. The skin and rind of summer squash are rich in the nutrient beta-carotene, but the fleshy portion of this vegetable is not. To gain the full nutritional benefits of this vegetable, the skins or rinds must be eaten.

Squash has been a staple for Native Americans for more than 5,000 years, and was a mainstay for early Europeans who settled in America. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson were enthusiastic squash growers. In the 19th century, merchant seamen returned from other parts of the Americas with many new varieties. This resulted in the various colors, shapes, and sizes available today.

Squash are commonly divided into two groups, summer and winter. There are several types of summer squash, but zucchini is the most popular summer squash purchased in the United States.

Summer squash come in many different colors and shapes. The different varieties of summer squash are interchangeable in most recipes, because most are similar in texture and flavor.

Choose squash that are firm and fairly heavy for their size, otherwise they may be dry and cottony inside. Look for squash that have bright, glossy exteriors. Avoid buying squash that have nicks or bruises on their skins or ones that have soft spots.

Place summer squash in plastic bags and store in the refrigerator. Fresh summer squash should keep for up to a week. Thicker-skinned varieties will stay fresh for two weeks or longer.

but they really shouldn't have it.

Vomiting could result from ingesting even a small amount.

Grapes and raisins can be life threatening if even a few are eaten and cause kidney failure if long term.

Onions, garlic and macadamia nuts should also be avoided. Sugar free foods that contain xylitol, may be good for people but they cause a dangerous drop in a dogs' blood sugar. So be smart and be prepared to rapidly pick up any of these items before Fido beats you to it. Cleaning up after a picnic is only slightly messy.

Cleaning up doggy bodily fluids, in a somewhat liquid state, from the grass in the yard is a nasty job no one wants to do.

Now, get out there and start looking for blackberries, raspberries and blueberries.

Check out the garden for early peppers, tomatoes and squash. Watch for critters crunching on your produce. With two full moons this month, things will be growing like crazy. That's my kind of crazy. Happy growing.

TROOPER

burial) today was based on his faith and his family's hope in Christ and belief in the resurrection.

"He lived it out loud. That's his legacy and that lasts forever."

Chrisman, 23, was killed last Tuesday evening when the patrol car he was driving slammed into a tractor-trailer as he was responding to a reckless driver call in western Kentucky. He was pronounced dead at the scene.

The note in his apartment spoke to Chrisman's core principles and faith, according to Will Cooper, associate minister at Ninevah Christian Church.

"Do everything for God #1 and #2 Family," the note said. "My God is first, my family is second."

He then went on to write, "Everyone is family."

Will Cooper said he did not know if Eric wrote the note as part of a Sunday school lesson he was planning or merely to remind himself of what was important as he began his career.

A week before his death, Cooper said Chrisman had attended Sunday school and suggested that a unit on the lives of the 12 apostles be taught.

Cooper said last week they took Eric's suggestion and began a unit on the 12 apostles.

"It was the largest attendance we have had in years."

Chrisman's death shook Lawrenceburg to its core. Still hurting from the loss of Lawrenceburg police officer Kenny Goodlett who succumbed to cancer and was buried the day after Chrisman's death, the community came out in droves to pay respects to Chrisman by flooding Ninevah Christian Church for visitation services Saturday and Sunday.

At times, the line of people waiting to get into the church snaked all the way out to Ninevah Road, as people waited up to four hours to pay their last respects.

During his funeral service, hundreds packed Ninevah Christian Church early Monday morning, eager to pay respect for the fallen trooper. As the seats quickly filled, many mourners were left to stand or watch a remote viewing of the service in the church atrium. The church usually seats about 750.

Kentucky State Police Commissioner Rodney Brewer said during the service that he has received an overwhelming correspondence from residents, legislators and even other highway patrol agencies across the country expressing their condolences for the loss of Chrisman.

Members of highway patrol agencies from across the nation were on hand, including representatives from California, West Virginia, Ohio, Alabama, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, Colorado, Mississippi and others.

Gov. Steve Beshear was also in attendance.

The out-of-state troopers came bearing folded flags from their home states, which they offered to Chrisman's family as they knelt and provided words of comfort.

Brewer said Chrisman, like his fellow troopers, understand the purpose and consequences behind their chosen paths. He lamented that Chrisman's life might have been cut short, but it was filled with purpose and honor.

"He (Chrisman) figured out early on that he wanted a life with purpose, meaning and substance. I would rather live 23 years on this earth with meaning than 80 years of hollowness."

Police agencies from across the country poured into Lawrenceburg for the service, joining at least 150 Kentucky State Police cruisers in escorting Chrisman's body from the church to Sand Spring Cemetery. By some counts, state police cruisers from 11 states and at least 30 other Kentucky counties were represented, along with college police agencies from the University of Kentucky, Western Kentucky University, Kentucky State University and others.

Large American flags suspended from fire trucks hung over Ninevah and Harrodsburg roads, and people lined the roads for the length of the procession, holding signs, waving flags and saluting as a hearse carrying Chrisman's body passed by.

At the cemetery, what appeared to be at least 1,000 troopers and police officers stood at attention as Chrisman's flag-draped casket was placed into a caisson and escorted to his grave by a rider-less horse with one boot turned backward in a stirrup and a contingent of bagpipe players and a Kentucky State Police honor guard.

The graveside ceremony included that honor guard presenting flags to Chrisman's parents, Randy and Dawn Chrisman, followed by a flyover by a team of state police helicopters.

The ceremony concluded with a chilling End of Watch call, a tradition that simulates a fallen officer being dispatched for duty one final time.

"This is the last and final call for Kentucky State Trooper Eric Chrisman," the voice said over a loudspeaker near his grave. "Kentucky State Trooper Eric Chrisman is cleared from duty. We'll take it from here."

That call brought tears to seemingly everyone, including many of the state troopers standing at attention who could be seen with tears streaming down their stoic faces.

Pastor Terry Cooper, who knew Chrisman for nearly his entire life, said even he had trouble containing his emotions while witnessing such a show of love and support.

"It was overwhelming," he said. "I've never seen anything like it and I've been to a lot of funerals."

"I was able to hold things together pretty well, but when they did that last call, that about took me out."

"It was much more than I expected," Cooper said of the show of support.

"I was overwhelmed, I'm still overwhelmed at the outpouring and the affect he had on that many people in only tion that he was a follower in Christ. "That's his legacy."

Schools opt out of non-traditional instruction program

Plan would allow students to work at home on snow days

By Ricki Barker
News staff

Snow days may have lost their appeal to some Kentucky students this upcoming school year. Instead of building snowmen and sledding when winter weather forces schools to close, students from 44 Kentucky school districts will be completing pre-arranged lessons from their teachers at home.

Many school districts have opted to participate in a non-traditional instruction program designed to keep students learning even when bad weather keeps them out of the classroom.

Anderson County is not one of them. Anderson County School Superintendent Sheila Mitchell said in an email that the school board chose not to apply for a waiver after researching the program and speaking with schools that participated in the program last year.

The waivers, granted by the Kentucky Department of Education, allow districts to count up to 10 non-traditional instruction days as regular attendance days in its school calendar and not have to make them up when bad weather passes.

Mitchell said that Anderson County students missed 10 days last school year due to bad weather and two days for illness.

The school board decided against applying for the waiver this year after research revealed some flaws within the program that officials felt would not benefit Anderson County students.

“We heard mixed reviews from school districts that participated last year in the waiver,” Mitchell explained. “Two administrators spent time researching options as well as talking to other school districts to gather information regarding the impact on student learning.”

School administrators reviewed the two options for non-traditional learning provided by the KDE for the program and weighed the pros and cons of each. Under the program, schools can choose whether to provide learning through a technology option or through a packet of paper-work provided by teachers.

Mitchell explained that the while technology option (where students could go online to complete assignments) offered an engaging learning experience, many students without access to computers and the Internet would not be able to complete the school work.

The packet option was found to be mostly review work of content that had already been taught or busy work that was time consuming or took too little time to complete.

Another flaw in the paperwork option that administrators discovered was the fact that students would be left to complete the work on their own without instruction and assistance from teachers.

The school board decided that the two options provided too little educational benefit to students.

“Our goal is to ensure students are provided with a high quality education and the options that were provided seemed to have cons that impacted student learning,” said Mitchell.

The superintendent said the school is currently evaluating an option that will keep students from falling behind during snow days.

“We are discussing an option to try for next school year that includes a project-based learning opportunity provided to students in December that they complete during snow days in January and February.

“Providing the project in December allows the teachers to present the project, scoring rubric and provide instruction needed to complete.”

If the project is successful this year, school administrators say they will recommend to the school board that snow days not be made up due to the instructional benefit from the project completion.

“If this is successful, then we will work on creating an extended version of this option for a waiver for the future,” said Mitchell. “Ultimately, we want the best possible educational opportunity for our students. We are working to find a waiver model that is beneficial to student learning.”

The district currently has an approved 170 calendar and can opt to not make up the snow days following KRS 158.060 that requires 170 student attendance day and 1,062 hours as long as requirements are met.

STUDENTS IN THE NEWS

Cox selected for Governor's Scholars Program

Katherine Cox, a daughter of Roger T. and Kay Cox, has been selected to attend the 2015 Kentucky Governor's Scholars Program, according to a news release.

Cox will attend classes at Murray State University for five weeks this summer, and will be a senior at Anderson County High School.

The Governor's Scholars Program, established in 1983, provides academic and personal growth through the balance of a strong liberal arts program with a full co-curricular and residential life experience. Students must complete an application and compete with others from across the state, according to a news release.

A signature element of the innovative undergraduate experience at WPI, the project-based curriculum offers students the opportunity to apply their scientific and technical knowledge to develop thoughtful solutions to real problems that affect the quality of people's lives, and make a difference.

Students earn degrees

The University of the Cumberlands conferred five advanced degrees in education to five local students last month.

Tracy Hall received a Masters of Arts in Education (MAE) degree in Read Write Specialist P to 12. Leslie Hulsey received a MAE in Teacher as Leader.

Rebecca Moreland, Heather Snodgrass and Logan Young all received MAE's in School Guidance Counselor.

Osborn named to dean's list

Lawrenceburg resident Mary Osborn has been named to the spring 2015 dean's list at Berea College, the school announced.

ruling while commending the clerk's office handling of the situation.

“I'd like to commend Jason Denny and his staff for carrying out their duties as prescribed by law. I cast my vote for Jason last election based on the fact that he has proved, in my estimation, to be a capable and competent County Clerk who does the job that his constituents sent him to do. The fact that his office was ready to deal with this not-unanticipated change, and did so in a professional manner, says to me that I was correct in this assessment,” wrote Nelson Maynard.

Others expressed concern for the division in the community.

“I'm very happy to see that even in a community as small as Anderson County, that people can be who they were born to be and have the support of at least a portion of our neighbors. Sadly, the other side of the coin has shown that some of those whom we counted as friends or loved as family, feel that we don't deserve the same happiness that they take for granted,” wrote Ray Drury.

Many others expressed their views with Bible scriptures and prayers.

Jess Thompson wrote: “May God forgive our nation.”

Mozart of mowing

Ashby, 9, has been cutting grass since he was 3

Ricki Barker
News staff

Most kids his age choose to retreat indoors on their tablets and phones, rather than face scorching temperatures and sweat-soaked T-shirts.

Brayden Ashby, 9, is not like most kids.

Where his peers bemoan the dirt, sweat and hard work of mowing grass, Ashby sees a chance to practice his craft, one he has been cultivating since before he could walk.

"I've almost mowed every yard on this street," Ashby says proudly while he sips a Big Red on his grandfather's couch. "It's just something I've always done."

Ashby's family say the 9-year-old's obsession with mowing began when he was a toddler.

"He learned to walk by pushing a toy bubble mower around the yard," Ashby's grandfather Tony Gates explains.

"While most kids have a walker, he was mowing."

His mother Jenny recalls her son's need to mow every inch of grass he could find.

"We would take his older sister to softball practice and we had to take the bubble mower with us so that he could mow the ball fields," she said.

Ashby said he became interested in lawn care after watching a local man mow yards around his neighborhood.

"I started watching him mow the block," he said.

"I watched how he did everything. I was interested."

His study turned into action as he tried to emulate the man's technique with his bubble mower at 3 years old.

"I once mowed the entire yard with the bubble mower. I spent hours trying to mow it. From about 3 o'clock to eight that night, I mowed."

"They had to come outside and stop me."

Seeing the interest his grandson had in mowing, Tony Gates decided to modify a real push mower to Ashby's size.

"The bubble mower was wearing out," he explained.

"So when he was about 4, I took an old Craftsman apart and cut down the handles so he could push it around the yard."

Gates removed the engine, blades and fuel tank and installed extra safety features on the mower so that Ashby could "mow" with a real mower.

Pretty soon, Ashby says the neighbors started playing along and payed him a couple of dollars to "mow" their grass.

"He would get in his Power Wheels and load up his lawn mower and go down the street," Gates said. "We used to have walkie-talkies and talk to each other when he mowing the neighbor's lawn."

As he grew older, Ashby realized he wasn't really cutting the grass.

"I looked at Pappy one day and asked him why I didn't have the stuff the other lawn mowers did?" he said.

Ashby said his grandfather taught him how to use a real mower years later and he started earning enough money mowing lawns to buy his own mower: a yellow Cub Cadet.

"I saved up all the money I earned over the years and bought the Cub Cadet with help from my parents and grandparents," he said. "I mow about two to three yards now on my own."

Ashby said his friends didn't quite understand his hobby and often thought the young man was in trouble.

"They thought it was punishment," he laughs.

"I was like, 'Hey, dude, I don't do it for punishment. I like it.'"

Ashby says there is a lot involved in achieving the perfectly manicured lawn.

He explained that cutting the grass at different angles results in a better lawn and having the right mower for the job is key.

Lessons he has learned through trial and error and YouTube videos on the subject.

"I've made mistakes," he admitted. "I ran over a culvert one time. That was bad. It messed up my mower pretty good. One time my mom had to stop me from mowing up a big hill. She was worried that I would get hurt."

Ashby's family says the young man's safety has always been a priority. All his mowers are designed to shut off quickly and he wears ear protection at all times.

Ashby said he has pursued other hobbies, but lawn care remains his favorite.

"I've always love it and I kept coming back to it," he said. "At first it was about money, but now I really enjoy doing it. I listen to music and just think about other stuff like wrestling and video games when I mow."

Ashby said his biggest pet peeves about people's yards are dead grass and lawns that look like

"they haven't mowed it once all year."

Grandmother Peggy Gates says she is proud of her grandson's accomplishments.

"He can really mow now. When he mows, it looks like a professional did it."

"He is very proud of it, too. He doesn't want you to walk on the grass when he's done."

Ashby says he still has a lot to learn but his family says the boy has talent.

"He likes to do designs in the yards. He is very detailed. And if we are out somewhere he can tell if someone is mowing," Tony Gates said. "He can tell just by the sound what kind of mower they are using. He'll tell me, 'Be quiet Pappy, somebody's mowing.'"

Brayden's family said they all thought he would outgrow the hobby and never thought the 9-year-old would make a business out of it.

"He's still as interested as ever," his grandmother said. "Mowing and wrestling. Those are his interests."

It's an interest Ashby was hoping to pass on to his youngest sister Reagan.

He recently bought her a pink bubble mower for her third birthday.

"I think he was trying to make her a part of his mowing business," joked

Brayden's mother.

The gift didn't work out as planned.

"I regret it now," said Ashby with his hands over his face. "It is so loud and annoying."

His family, who spent years listening to the pop of a toy mower, laugh at the irony of the situation.

It may come as no surprise, but Ashby says he wants to be a landscape architect when he is older.

Debris from dynamiting destroys Anderson homes

40 YEARS AGO

Thursday, July 1, 1965
Homes damaged

Two Anderson County homes were damaged by heavy rock when dynamiting was done on Highway 127 Tuesday afternoon.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Hollie Warford was located about seven miles from Lawrenceburg and 200 feet off the highway.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Thompson was located 500 to 600 feet from the highway and to the rear of the Warford residence.

Mrs. Warford said she was told by workmen when to expect the blast (about 4:15 p.m.) and was advised to leave home.

She said she asked if the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson was far enough away and was told that it was, so she went to the Thompson home to stay until after the explosion had been set off.

She reported that a large rock struck the roof of her home and another went through the roof. Many large rocks were thrown complete over her house and many were lodged all around her home. She said two men worked from 6:45 a.m. until noon Wednesday loading the rock and cleaning up the yard.

Plastering was cracked in all the rooms of the homes and seven windows were broken out. The two front doors were also damaged.

At the Thompson home a 24 pound rock was thrown through the roof of the home, into the hallway.

It left a hole in the floor and bounced into the bathroom, damaging the toilet fixture.

Another large rock struck the end of the glassed-in back porch where Mr. and Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. War-ford were sitting.

Two windows were broken and glass shattered over all three. The rock struck about two feet from where Mr. Thompson was sitting. A mirror on the porch was shattered.

Mrs. Warford said the noise from the explosion was extremely loud.

She said one of the workmen was in the yard and was invited into the house by Thompson but stayed in the yard, saying he was not afraid of being struck.

Tarpaulins and plastic were placed at the broken windows to keep out the rain. No estimate could be given on the amount of damage at the time.

Sheriff John Birdwhistell other damage had been reported due to previous blasting on the road.

What's in a name? Misnomer treats still taste sweet

They're not balls and they're not cakes. They're actually cookies. Exquisite, melt in your mouth little cookies. And they are so very easy to make.

This cookie originated in Mexico. Known as biscochitos in Mexico, the ingredients are ground nuts, flour, butter, and sugar. Once baked, the cookies are either rolled in balls or formed into a crescent shape and then rolled in powdered sugar.

The ingredients are almost identical to Russian Tea Cakes. This cookie recipe didn't start appearing in US cookbooks until the mid 1950s.

My grandmother and my mom both made this cookie quite often when I was growing up. I never really ate them because I didn't like the pecans in them. My taste buds have grown up a little since then, and I eat them now. I did treat myself, once, to a batch with no nuts!

If you'd like a simple, yet delicious cookie to take to a potluck meal or just to share with your family one night, try these out.

Mexican Wedding Ball Cookies

1 cup butter
1/2 cup powdered sugar
2 cups AP flour
1/2 tsp. salt
2 tap. vanilla
1 cup finely chopped pecans

Cream butter with mixer. Add powdered sugar an mix well. Add flour, salt, vanilla, and pecans. Place in refrigerator for about one hour. Pinch off dough and shape into small balls, no bigger than 1 inch. Place balls on an increased cookie sheet and bake at 350 for 20 minutes. After they've cooled, roll in powdered sugar.

I first ate Monkey Bread when I was about 9 years old. My friend's mom would make it for breakfast when I would sleep over and I looked forward to it every time. I remember hers being in a 9x13 pan.

The recipe I adopted and tweaked some 15 years later is baked in a bundt pan.

Monkey bread quickly became a favorite of my children and still is. I've received several requests for this sweet, doughy breakfast dessert; so without further ado ...

Monkey Bread

(1) 4 pack Pillsbury biscuits (home style or buttermilk)
1 cup granulated sugar, divided

1 cup brown sugar
1 1/2 sticks butter
1 tbs. & 1 tsp. cinnamon, divided

Preheat oven to 350°. Mix 1/2 cup granulated sugar and 1 tsp. cinnamon in bowl. Quarter two cans of biscuits; roll pieces in sugar mixture. Place evenly in bundt pan. On stove top, melt other 1/2 cup sugar, brown sugar, butter and remaining cinnamon. Stir well. I find that melting butter slowly will keep it from separating from other ingredients.

Pour 1/2 of mixture over biscuit pieces. Repeat steps with other two cans of biscuits. Pour remaining butter/sugar mixture. Bake for 35 minutes; longer if you don't like it doughy. Invert bundt pan onto large plate or cake stand. Serve immediately. Serves about eight.

Two different meanings for submit and commit

The men I spoke about last time discovered that their true identity as believers was paramount to change. That was the first of the keys to unlocking the secret to change. Their second discovery was the actual and literal meaning of two little words: commit and submit.

Larry Coleman
Faith Columnist

Those two little words look the same and are often used interchangeably, but when you discover the real difference they open the door of understanding further. Discovery of their secret happened almost ten years ago for me. Let's look at them. Commit means to give my life to something or someone, while still retaining within myself all rights and all authority to make the final decision in all cases. It means I am still in control of my life. Submit means to give my life to something or someone, but also to turn over all rights and all authority to that someone so that they make the final decision in all cases. It means that someone else is in control of my life.

I'm sure many of you at one time or another have found yourself in some presentation where the speaker at the end of the talk ask for anyone who wasn't a believer to come forward and "commit their life to Christ."

The shocking thing about that invitation is that it has no foundation in scripture.

Scripture simply tells us to "believe and receive" a person. Remember the scripture pictures us at birth to be spiritually dead and without the ability to know God, love God or choose God in our souls, yet physically alive.

Therefore, when I am asked to commit I'm still in charge, and I'm without the power necessary to make the desired change last. Oh, it can look good for a while but it simply doesn't last.

In my personal examination of the word commit in scripture, I made a very interesting discovery.

In every case where commit was chosen by the translators, all but two fit the definition of submit.

In the two cases where it didn't fit it was applied to God and not to man.

The most noticeable one was in the case of Abram. At the moment of decision, which would change

Abram's life forever, God put Abram to sleep and then God passed between the two halves of the sacrificed animal.

Why? Only God had the power to keep the commitment.

God knew that Abram could not keep the commitment so God took the responsibility upon himself as he had the power.

Of course you know the rest of the story. Without God's ability to keep Abram history might have taken a far different course.

Let's see if I can provide a current perspective and example without offending anyone.

I have in many occasions met people who are either in or have come out of recovery programs not centered on Christ. In every case those people introduce themselves as "a recovering _____." That implies that they are just one step from returning to their previous lifestyle.

While on the other hand I have met people who met and submitted their life to a person - the Lord Jesus Christ - and they are a completely recovered with a new life entirely.

Paul in his letter to the Galatian believers states this dramatic difference in Chapter 2 and verse 20. 20 I have been crucified with Christ; and it is no longer I who live, but Christ lives in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the son of God, who loved me and gave himself up for me.

When Paul met the lord Jesus Christ on that road the center of his life changed forever.

The power he needed to change no longer came from him but the person if you will who lived within.

Paul is an example of the difference between committing and submitting your life to Christ.

And, when those men not only grasped their true identity, but also saw the true meaning of commit and submit, the hope for the change they desired became open to them for the first time. More on the third element next time.

YOU NEED A NEW PREACHER

Jeff Foxworthy said, "If your preacher needs smoke bombs, rock bands, theater lights, dramatic skits, and circus acts to keep people interested then you need a new preacher." I might also add that you need new leadership and "follow-ship" because it must also mean that the congregation is wanting such. Just what is the responsibility of local leadership in the church?

Paul told Timothy, "I charge you (man of God - Timothy - D.L.) therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who will judge the living and the dead at His appearing and His kingdom: Preach the word! Be ready in season and out of season. Convince, rebuke, exhort, with all longsuffering and teaching. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but according to their own desires, because they have itching ears, they will heap up for themselves teachers; and they will turn their ears away from the truth and turn aside to fables. But you be watchful in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, fulfill your ministry" (2 Timothy 4:1-5).

Timothy, the evangelist (preacher) was to fulfill his WORK, he was to "PREACH THE WORD." I can't imagine the preachers of the early church using all this tomfoolery to get their messages across. The power is in the gospel (Rom. 1:16) and it doesn't need to be dressed up with modern day junk.

Read Paul's description of his work as an evangelist in Acts 26:14-20. He didn't play with his work, but did it. Preachers, stop being clowns!

Ultimate teammate loved by those who knew him

Chrisman lived out his deep faith in all he did

Kentucky lost a good one last week. Make that a great one that our state lost when Eric Chrisman, a Kentucky State Trooper who was less than six months into his career, died in the line of duty. Our state lost a great young man who just happened to grow up in Anderson County.

John Herndon
Sports Editor

Rams to victory. The Rams ended up as national runner-up that year and the photo was vintage Eric Chrisman. He's wearing his warmup jacket, so apparently he was not in the game at the time of the win, but that did not deter his zest for Ram basketball. After he graduated from CAL, Chrisman gave back through coaching. "He was an assistant for the boys' basketball team the 2013-14 season," remembers Ram head coach Cory Robinson. "He was going to help coach again the next season, but he received the call to go to the state police academy. After he graduated (from the academy), he would come back and help when possible, but being in western Kentucky, he couldn't get back home."

That love for Ram basketball was only surpassed by his zest for his faith in God. And mark my word, Eric Chrisman loved living and loved sharing his faith. I was told that the week before he died, Chrisman had worked with young people for a week at Camp Calvary in Washington County and attended church with his dad on Father's Day. And he left a strong legacy. Over the years, I saw him around town and there was one common denominator every time our paths crossed: He was smiling.

Never did I see Eric without a smile. That was so apparent the only conversation that I remember having with Eric Chrisman. It was at the girls' state basketball tournament in 2013. The tourney was held at Diddle Arena on the campus of Western Kentucky University, where Chrisman was finishing up his studies. As I was walking through the tunnel leading to the Diddle Arena floor, I spotted Eric in a police uniform and waved. Honestly, I was not sure it was Eric as I did not know how far along he was in school and I had lost track of him after his high school graduation. He waved back and smiled. Always smiling. It was undoubtedly a reflection of the deep Christian faith Chrisman lived. Eric made his way over to my seat on press row and chatted a few minutes. He told me he was working for the WKU Police Department and was looking to a career in law enforcement. Our conversation was cut short as Anderson County was getting ready to play but I distinctly remember Chrisman saying he was glad he was able to watch the Lady Bearcats while working at the game. I truly admire young men like that who want to better the world in which they live in some small way. Eric Chrisman did that, whether he was driving a police car, working church camp or playing and coaching sports. "All the players loved Eric," Robinson said. "He was such a positive influence on them. Everything he did was to build them up. They hated to see him leave, but they understood. To sum up how much those boys loved Eric, they went to his graduation when he graduated from KSP Academy. He was loved by us all. He's going to be missed." A Facebook friend, Caleb Sayre, posted last week, "Just the other day, Eric told me a guy he arrested said he was the nicest trooper he ever met. I believe it is because there (are) few people more nice than Eric." Not many would disagree. Thank you, Trooper Chrisman for your service. And thank you most of all for that smile. Comment at theandersonnews.com.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Herndon honored by Society of Professional Journalists
Anderson News sports editor John Herndon was honored for his work by the Society of Professional Journalists, Louisville Chapter, at the organization's 2015 awards banquet Thursday night in Louisville.

Herndon was awarded first place in sports writing for his story on Anderson County High School baseball coach L.W. Barnes being inducted into the the Kentucky High School Baseball Coaches Hall of Fame. The story, which was titled, "From Huck Finn to the Hall of Fame," was published in January 2014.

The judge's comment praised Herndon's knowledge of community sports and breadth of coverage. The Anderson News competes in the Non-Metro Division. The competition was judged by the Detroit chapter of the SPJ. According to the Louisville Chapter website, "The Society of Professional Journalists is the nation's most broad-based journalism organization, dedicated to encouraging the free practice of journalism and stimulating high standards of ethical behavior." The competition was open to media outlets in parts of Kentucky and Indiana.

Get your news to The News

The Anderson News is often asked how to get sports news, photos and information in the paper for publication.

The process is easy. You can send information and photos via our website, www.theandersonnews.com or e-mail sports editor John Herndon at jpherndon@theandersonnews.com. Be sure to include a phone number or e-mail address where we can reach you if necessary. The deadline is 8 a.m. Monday. We also want your schedules. Our one-person sports department obviously can't be everywhere, but we won't be able to consider covering your events without schedules. This is especially true of non-varsity sports and youth sports. Thank you for making The Anderson News your place for Anderson County sports.

Duncan looking for national berth

From staff reports

Anderson County resident Connor Duncan is planning to compete in the AAU regional meet, being held at Knoxville, Tenn., from June 30 to July 3. Duncan, a rising senior at Anderson County High School, needs to be one of the top six finishers to qualify for the Junior Olympics, to be held in Norfolk, Va., in August. Running unattached due to a scheduling conflict that kept him from competing with USA Track and Field, Duncan has had a busy summer. He competes in the 17-18 year old division. At the district meet, held at Assumption High School in Louisville on June 20, Duncan placed second in the 110-meter hurdles with a time of 17.30. He won the 400-meter hurdles at 100.15.

Getting the Country Active

In 1956, a study came out that revealed American children were not as physically fit as European children. Many Americans were concerned about this, including President Dwight D. Eisenhower, who founded the President’s Council on Youth Fitness to deal with the issue.

The council worked hard to get Americans up and moving. It set up an awards program and helped establish National Physical Fitness and Sports Month in May.

Although its name has changed, the President’s Council on Physical Fitness and Sports continues to lead the charge in keeping Americans active and physically fit. Bravo!
